December 2015, No.133

President's Page

Later today UC Libraries will host our annual appreciation staff party. As 2015 comes to a close, I am glad that our traditions here at UC ask us to take time to reflect on our accomplishments and plan for the coming year.

I do not want to suggest that we all write a good word at year's end, but I suggest that we take time and reflect on our good work and note where our energies have gone over the past year.

Next year... Looking forward to 2016, CAHSLA has several great programs coming up. I personally am very excited about the Clifton branch library tour in February and the tech convo in April.

I wish all of you a great end to 2015 and hope you are celebrating your accomplishments with family, friends and colleagues who whole heartedly support you. And I wish you well for 2016.

Happy Holidays, Amy Koshoffer

CAHSLA Holiday Party

OHSLA Fall Meeting Report

The Ohio Health Sciences Library Association held its annual fall meeting on October 30, 2015 at the Ohio University's Heritage College of Osteopathic Medicine.

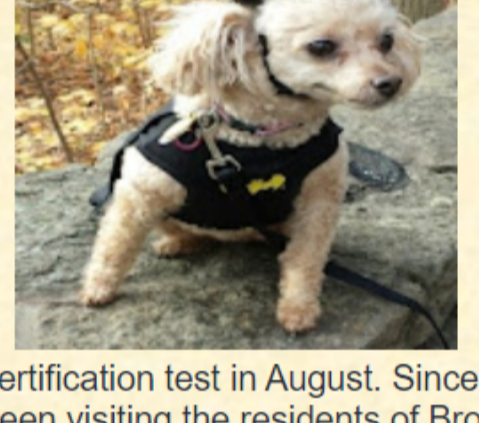

During the business meeting, Clare Leibfarth described the efforts to date to plan for the 2018 Annual Meeting of the Midwest Chapter of the Medical Library Association which will be held in Ohio.

CAHSLA Colleagues

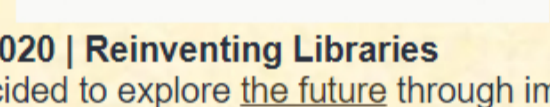

Congratulations to Emily Kean (Digital Services Librarian at the Boone County Public Library) were chosen as one of the founding members of the DPLA Curation Corps.

Amy Koshoffer reports: I attended the Midwest Data Librarian Symposium held in Milwaukee, Wisconsin in Oct. It was a great event for learning about data management instruction, building partnerships with stakeholders, consulting on data management, curating data and meeting other librarians from the Midwest region.

Lisa McCormick (Jewish Mercy) reports that Sophia passed the Therapy Dogs International certification test in August. Since being certified, Sophia and Lisa have been visiting the residents of Brookdale Senior Living in Edgewood, Kentucky.

The Librarian in 2020 | Reinventing Libraries

Library Journal decided to explore the future through imagined job descriptions. If you have been in the profession for a while, you can see segments of things that look familiar, melded with novel and even surprising elements.

Peer-Review Fraud - Hacking the Scientific Publication Process

Charlotte J. Haug, M.D., Ph.D. authored a Perspectives article the December 17 issue of New England Journal of Medicine on the continuing problem of scientific fraud.

Haug offers several lessons to be learned from the latest revelations from BioMed Central and Hindawi on the large-scale fraudulent papers these organizations uncovered in her perspective piece.

Impact Evaluation of Clinical Librarianship

A British colleague recently authored a paper on evaluating the impact of clinical librarians. The impact of the clinical librarian: a review by Tom Roper, Brighton and Sussex NHS Library and Knowledge Service, Brighton, United Kingdom.

Music Librarians Featured in Enquire Story

"Since summer, three librarians at the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra have been up against a daunting deadline. They are trying to put up to a million pieces of music into as much order as possible by Monday, when it all has to be moved out of Music Hall to prepare for the historic hall's renovation in June."

What Libraries [Can] Still Do

Jack Gleick at the New York Review of Books reflects on the tensions managers of physically housed libraries are facing from information technology as he reviews John Palfrey's new book, BiblioTech.

Report: Hospitals are breaking the law by not reporting clinical trial results

Federal law requires institutions - including hospitals - to report the results of clinical trials, but reporter Charles Pillar [STAT News] found that most do not report the findings of their trials.

Unsettling Memoir and the War on Cancer

The New Yorker has reviewed Vincent T. DeVita's explosive memoir The Death of Cancer. DeVita, the former head of the National Cancer Institute, "has written an institutional history of the war on cancer. His interest is in how the various factions and constituencies involved in that effort work together—and his conclusions are deeply unsettling."

Memorable Healthcare Quotes of 2015

From Becker's Hospital Review On the record: 50 best healthcare quotes of 2015:

"Bob Dylan, to improve my language skills, I've read all your lyrics. I can read 800 million pages per second. My analysis shows your major themes are time passes and love fades." IBM Watson, artificial intelligence robot that moved into health IT this year, on Bob Dylan's repertoire

"I have this fundamental belief the infrastructure of healthcare is obsolete. It's all pre-Internet. But because we love healthcare and because it's a public good, we create a regulatory environment where it's hard for it to die."

Who's in Charge? A Truly Hair-Raising Answer?

What do Zorro, Tarzan, and the Three Musketeers have in common? If history and legends are correct, mustaches. Additionally, they could be welcomed by an elite group of medical school leaders who outnumber women in leadership roles in top U.S. institutions.

A recent analysis of the photos of 1,018 medical department leaders from top U.S. medical schools funded by the National Institutes of Health. Researchers found 190 were mustached men and 130 were women. This equates to 19 percent men with mustaches and 13 percent women.

Best Medical Inventions of 2015

JMIR has released its annual list of the year's best inventions—including several related to health care. The items below are taken verbatim from the website:

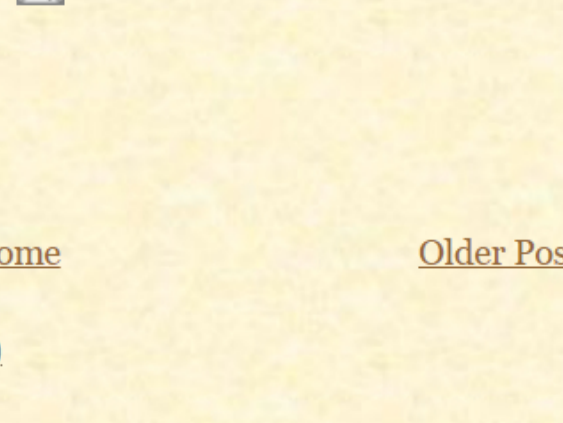

- Clean water, from a book: People in developing countries can use the Drinkable Book's trick pages—which also contain instructions—to filter water. In testing, the filters killed more than 99% of bacteria, and researchers are exploring whether they can kill other contaminants like viruses, too.
- Personal gluten sensor: 6SensorLabs' Nima gluten sensor, which starts shipping next year, takes the guesswork out of knowing if your food is gluten free, TIME says. Drop a small sample of food or drink into the device's well—and in as little as two minutes—the test is complete.
- Cloud-powered stethoscope: The Eko Core stethoscope attachment transmits heartbeat data to the cloud. Physicians can analyze the data with a smartphone app, which compares the data with previous recordings to spot problems like heart murmurs.

Dictation Mistakes - The gift that keeps on giving

He is concerned because the eyelids are old and had been in the refrigerator for a long time. Chief complaint: "increased worry/anxiety." Heart: "truly systolic murmur." Patient expired and was discharged home. Patient sitting up comfortably, eating her lung.
